This Man

There was a man who once had strong, straight shoulders, eyes that sparkled and a smile that lit up his smooth lovely face.

He traveled throughout their land, some short trips, others across country, warning people to slow down and take the time to find a safer brighter future. He told people of a sure cure for their afflictions.

He was on call 365 days a year, 7 days a week, 24 hours a day. During sleeping hours, meals, and family gatherings, this man was on call.

He listened to the unhappy ones, tried to help mend the broken marriages, listened to those in the state of depression, and counseled others. He was there at the call of death and to help at the time of sorrow.

He was a man who was so filled with love that he could share it with so many people. Well, the years took their toll and he no longer carried his shoulders as straight as he once did. The gleam in his eyes wasn't as bright and the smile that lit up his face didn't appear as often, and when it did, it showed the wrinkles in his once smooth face.

Who was this man? Well, he wasn't a truck driver or a policeman, not a doctor nor a psychiatrist or an undertaker. No, he wasn't god. He was a minister, a man of God. But most important to us, he was our Dad.

And like so many other ministers' children, we have shared his love with every man, woman and child of his church. When his own children were sick, he left them to go pray for someone else's child. It was hard at times to share him and his love. But because he did what he thought he should, and never changed his standards through the years, makes us even more proud that Carl Page is our dad.
